Editor's Note

It should be noted that in some cases a relationship between the operation of CJ programs and the funding source areas of concern/interest is not direct. In these cases it is anticipated that grantsmanship skills and imagination will be utilized when writing the proposal so that such a relationship is made clear. It is recommended that grant seeking activities be undertaken in conjunction with your institution's Development and/or Federal Relations Official(s) to assure maximum resource utilization and coordination. Here are a few tips which should make that first meeting with your development personnel an all-out success.

Foundations and agencies receive many worthy requests each day which they must decline either for lack of funds, inappropriate requests, and/or for poorly prepared applications. Foundation and agency staff time is limited while competition for scarce dollars is growing. To assure careful consideration of your grant applications, thoughtfully study your own institution and the characteristics and previous funding patterns of the potential funding source before applying.

A proposal intended for serious consideration should be submitted with a cover letter briefly outlining the purpose and nature of the activities to be undertaken, the dollar amount requested, and the anticipated operational time parameter. Minimally, a proposal must give evidence of careful analysis of your institution's needs, its credibility, and capacity to perform the task for which the funds are requested. In addition, the qualifications of the project staff must be well established, the budget made clear and revelant, and the means of evaluating progress presented convincingly. See appendices for grant writing considerations and supplemental source materials.

What Will a Foundation Look for When You Submit a Grant? by Robert A. Mayer, 1977
This text specifically details strategies for foundation grant applications. The information is presented in an easy-to-follow format.

Grant Writing Considerations

- Query the foundation before preparing and submitting lengthy proposals; submit an identifying package containing:
  - a letter specifically requesting application guidelines
  - a statement of institutional purpose
  - a listing of Criminal Justice department's objectives
  - an institutional brochure, annual report, etc.
  - a Criminal Justice brochure
  - PFI Public Affairs Criminal Justice Monograph
  - LEAA News Release featuring Criminal Justice educational development at PFI schools
- Submit only those proposals which fall within the grantors areas of concerns and within its means.
- The relationship between the objectives, the methodology and the evaluation plan should be evident.
- Seek external technical assistance as needed.
- Write application as clearly, briefly, and concisely as possible; insure it explains:
  - What will do what?
  - How? - When? - Where? - Why? - With Whom? - At What Cost?
  - Who will evaluate what has been done?
- Submit the application as long before the deadline as possible.
- Allow the time required by the review schedule before inquiring about the status of the application.
